Dear Shawn Mendes, I can't lie. I wasn't very happy to go when I first bought the tickets. I thought it was kind of a victim: I could do it through a concert, so my girls' dreams would come true. I saw it as a late night filled with loud crowds and insane amounts of midnight traffic on my drive home. But my girls, (insert tween voice and tone) they really, really, really like, just had to go to a concert. Everyone else was going, I know? They were recruiting (old school style) every local radio station over and over and over again to win tickets to the show. When my daughter set the alarm for the radio contest at 7am, midsummer!, I just knew I had no choice. And so, like thousands of other moms, I succumbed to peer pressure and pledged to get lost in Japan. But life surprises us, doesn't it? The night that I was initially slightly afraid turned into one of my favorite all-time nights ever as a mom and as a sober adult. Here's what I learned from your concert, Mr.Mendes: Skinny Jeans are hell, yes Thank you for helping me see the positive in the trend that men wear skinny jeans. I never got this trend until you took the stage at Mohegan Sun. You pull them out like no other. I leaned over to my daughter and whispered, OMG, he looks so good in skinny jeans! She gave me that kind of disgust, you know, one teenager when her mother makes any indication that a member of the opposite sex is attractive and she proceeded as if she didn't hear me. So I tried daughter number two, don't you like the skinny jeans on it? Again, no answer. 0:2. Mom, 0:2. Skinny jeans turned me into tween myself and I knew we were in for a fun night. Yes, I know I'm 41 and you're only 21 and I see a small, cougar angle here, but in my defense ... biceps, too. Moms and dads just about the best kind of crazy with music roaring, our bracelets glowing, and teens screaming their lungs all around, I took note of moms and dads, grandparents who sacrificed their time, money, and the usual Saturday night plans to bring their favorite teens (to the casino of all places in Uncasville, CT) to your concert. I actually got goosebumps as I watched these adults. At first most parents looked bored, yawning, sitting, and glued to their cell phones as their daughters jumped in anticipation of your arrival on stage. Once you took the stage, however, these same parents couldn't help but jump to their feet and groove to the music. They waved their hands in the air as if they didn't care. It was such a beautiful site. My parents are crazy. We go above and beyond and we love and we coddle and we spoil and we worry. We make shit happen. We're sacrificing. We work overtime to buy tickets, and we go home at 1 a.m. just so that our kids can see their favorite musician. Being a parent is rarely easy, but it's nights like these, so useful. Wouldn't be if every time we did something right or love or a little top crazy, our kids cheered and shouted for us, as they do for Shawn Mendes? Good music heals all your music, playing guitar, playing the piano, dancing and special effects culminating in one of the most amazing live shows I have ever seen. I never expected this, but I was so pleasantly surprised and impressed. You have an amazing talent, and you do God's work by sharing these talents and your passion and energy with the world. This is what you were made to do. And in the hours that we were blessed to be part of your music world, all our problems disappeared. All that mattered during the 2 hours you were on stage was the music, the rhythm, the show, and... Well, your skinny jeans. Good music will always be a goat place of evil and stress and anxiety and anxiety. Even when it's good music, you don't know so well. You get a second chance at life I cried during your concert-a few times, really. I know it's crazy, right? I just knew I was in a room with greatness, and I don't just mean you. What was happening around me was great: happiness, joy and gratitude. I was really touched. At the same time, I was sad. Just as I thought it was the best concert I've ever been to, I realized one very sad and harsh truth: it was the first concert I've ever had sober. I've been sober for almost 6 years, but during my own concert going days, I only attended the show heavily intoxicated. I never remembered the concert the next day. As you sang Stiches and the crowd went crazy, I was overcome with awe-it-so-amazing, I thought. How many moments did I miss because I was drunk? How could I wake up the day after the concert and thought: It was fun when I didn't remember absolutely anything about it? I was disgusted by my former self for a short time. But I found a new beginning at your concert - do more if you like, and I changed that aversion to gratitude. Thank God I'm here experiencing this today with my kids, and thank God I'm doing it sober. So, I breathed at every moment of your concert, as a 12-year-old girl, as my daughters experienced their first ever concert-unexpectedly, just like I did. A handwritten note is a memory and memory that will not be deleted by your inbox. (I still have notes from my 7th grade friend, my late grandmother, my best best They are priceless.). 5. It shows personal contact for any occasion: love, congratulations, gratitude and condolences. 6. The Harvard Business Review states that they are a rare commodity, but more important than ever. See! 7. The note shows that the sender evaluates the correspondence enough to use their own paper writing (which costs much more than free email!). 8. Reaction to receiving a handwritten note is something like: Wow, this man had an old school of decency. He/she didn't have the time to slow down their day to carefully write this to me. How thoughtful. 9. If you are too lazy to write your own handwritten note apparently, now there is a robot that will write them for you. Yes, I mean it. 10. So take an extra 5-10 minutes out of your day, and send a handwritten note the next time you feel so obliged. Three years ago, the can't Have You singer had only one. Now, he's got six -- actually make that seven. Mendes had just added another tattoo to his fast-growing collection, and the design came straight from Twitter.On Sunday night, Mendes posted a Boomerang video to his Instagram Story showing that he was in the middle of getting ink tattoo artist Livia Tsang. Tattoo? Butterfly wings, half of which burst into a bouquet of flowers. It's cool, isn't it? Well, the backstory behind where and how Mendes found the design is quite unique. Last week, Mendes' super fan, Kayla (@nasaruins), posted two edited photos of the singer on Twitter with - fake! - Butterfly tattoo on the left hand. Shawn Mendes with a butterfly tattoo, she tweeted. I'm resting my business. One day later, Mendes retweeted the photo, writing: Wait, this is a huge, can-dm picture?? After a brief direct exchange of message with Kayla, Mendes received an ahold of butterfly designs that was originally created by a Chile-based tattoo artist who goes on @macdreaper on Instagram. It turns out Mendes loved the idea of tattooing so much he made it permanent. On Sunday night, Tsang posted a photo of Mendes with a ready-made tattoo. Mendes spoke about the fan tattoo on the morning show Heat Radio with Emily Segal in June 2017. They designed this light bulb with roots coming out of the bottom, he explained. On the inside are these blue orchids, the same color that we used throughout the tour. It was beautiful. He added that he was well aware that his fans were impressive artists. After putting out a request for a tattoo design, he was sure that will lead to something beautiful. The finished design was later featured in Mendes's There's Nothing Holding Me Back music video. Mendes has five other tattoos in his collection, all of which are as significant as - and if he wanted to do a couple of tattoos with his new girlfriend, Camila Cabello, we wouldn't mind.
